FARM AND STATION.

EDUCATING THE FARMER.

Judging from recent remarks, the Minister for Agriculture realises that it will not be an easy matter to find competent managers for the demonstration farms, concerning the establishment of which he appears to be keen. That difficulty was forecast in these columns when the proposal was first mentioned. It is not matter for surprise that such a difficulty should exist, and if the rate of pay contemplated to be on the same number of hours as those given by the department, the difficulty is insurmountable. Men may be got, but it is very doubtful if it can be expected that they will be competent. Yet, if such farms are established, any incompetency will simply be fatal. Indeed, it would be calamitous for such a farm to prove a failure, as the effect upon the farmers would be to antagonise them to the work of the department, and counteract the good work that has been done, and is otherwise done. When, in addition to the cost of finding men, we learn that the estimates of the department have been seriously reduced, it can be taken that these farms are out of the question for some time, at least. That is rather a matter for congratulation, for we fail to see what good it is to be expected from their establishment, while there is danger of harm. It is needless to recapitulate the objections to the demonstration farms, excepting again to point out that the work done, by far the best method, is to be found in the best form of demonstration farm that can possibly be obtained. The department will be doing its part by leaving it to the most progressive farmers to illustrate their practical utility.

In this connection it is most regrettable that, there should be any curtailment of the money available for the work of the department. Coming after the practical relaxation of the department to a number of points, it can only be expected that the result will be that the department realises the importance in this country of a thoroughly-effective Department of Agriculture. Yet there was never a time when its importance to the rural community was more pronounced than at present, or its opportunity for doing enormous good more brilliant. The departmental development of the State, and a universal interest in rural development being displayed by all classes of the community. It would be most unfortunate, therefore, that the work of the department should be checked in any way. It is to be hoped that such a state of affairs will not be allowed to expand. We have often pointed out that, so far, this department has never been properly recognised in a financial sense. Its work is such that it cannot be appreciated with money-making branches of the public service, yet, if the actual monetary value of that work could be actually set down, it would be one of the most valuable State enterprises in the country. The value to the producer and therefore to the State of the improved varieties of wheat alone, represents a sum that would probably cover the whole expenditure of the Department of Agriculture for many years. But because it can be allowed to expand to the cost of the treasurer, the department, apparently does not get the credit it should. A Government truly understanding the value of such a department (providing it is conducted upon educational lines) and it is not, the Government, in its present attitude, that the organisation, which it is, could, so far from reducing its expenditure, utilises even available additional funds to extend its functions.

The fungous, although this year a case of the disease attacking an oat crop has been found.

Some fruitgrowers are endeavouring to work up a country trade by forwarding fruit to retailers in the country. Good prices are obtained, as the fruit seller in country towns is often as much a victim to the present system of distribution as the grower. The effect of the latter, however, is not so great, with is that some selling agents in Sydney, fearing that their trade will be spoilt, offer fruit at a ridiculously low figure to fruitgrowers in those towns, where the fruitgrower is endeavouring to work up a connection. The result is that the producer once more has to give way to the middle man. All of which goes to show the need of co-operation in the sale and distribution of fruit.

An additional number of fruitgrowers are taking a "stand" in the Sydney Municipal Markets this summer, and selling their own fruit. The result has so far been very satisfactory, and the expense of going to Sydney once or twice a week has been more than compensated for. The growers consider that the results generally are better, and the loss of cases—a very serious matter to growers—was minimised to an extent never before experienced, when the fruit was consigned to agents.

Tomatoes are thriving this year, and it is expected that there will be a very good crop, although the fruit is somewhat slow in turning colour. The crop with which we have been growing is very popular, and although "tomato rot" is occasionally found among the vines, still it is comparatively free from disease. Some growers take the ground for rotation, preparing a strong solution of lime, loosening the earth round the vines, and pouring the solution around the plant. Care must be taken not to put it on the plant.

The first time in the history of the sugar industry in the northern parts of Queensland a crop is growing freely. It has been for many years, growing, or failing, to bring the return from the cane, the juice being dried out to a large extent, that remains being not so sweet. Flowering of sugar cane is a sign of loss of stamina and an inclination to revert, and is due to want of care in selection when planting fresh fields.

A Queensland beekeeper who has been in New Guinea states that as far as he could learn there are no varieties of bees which could be used. The only kind he came across was similar to our native bee.

A correspondent writes urging the necessity for a farmers and settlers' club in Sydney, which farmers might use as a port of call and common meeting point for men of their class. He avers that a first-class farmers' club would soon prove one of the most successful in Sydney.

ENGLISH WOOL TRADE.

BOOMING MARKET IN TEXTILES.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT)

BULIFORD, Nov. 15.

It is always interesting to know the actual standing of the raw material in the principal markets of the world, and no matter whether it be a buying or a selling centre, the results are in a large measure the same. Just as the present trade is in a very large extent taken up with the former, and all eyes are still turned in the direction of Australia, the Capital and Bengal, so the market for English wool is in the extension of the work of the department to a number of points, and the market in India, and in the rest of the world, is in the greater part of the day with the department.

The most important figures of all are those relating to our exports of raw wool, and below are the figures for the past three years:

MURDEROUS BURGLARS.

LARGE AREA AFFECTED.

LONDON, Dec. 19.

All the Russians who were arrested in connection with the burglary and murder of three policemen at Houndsditch have been released, except Selinska, the Russian woman who was identified as a companion of the burglars.

LONDON, Dec. 19.

The burglary at Houndsditch and the murder of the three constables have caused a sensation in London. One newspaper suggests arming the police, as the guardians of property. This journal points out that at present they require helpers to fight for the shots of burglars.

The blowpipes abandoned in the house at Houndsditch were for use with oxygen and hydrogen gas and were similar to those used in the burglary at Wright and Hodges' premises at Birmingham in September.

Goldschmid, alias Levi, a Russian Pole, who died from a revolver shot, was reported to have been accidentally injured during the conflict with the police, rented the house in Houndsditch next to the jewellers' which they proposed to rob.

The burglars handled automatic pistols, which are far deadlier than an ordinary revolver.

ARMED AMMUNITION, AND Nihilist literature were found in the domicile of Goldschmid, at Whitechapel, whither he was taken after being shot.

Selinska, the woman who was associated with the burglars, remains in custody. Her woman friend, who disappeared when Goldschmid was taken to the domicile, urged her to burn all documents, and she obeyed.

Selinska declines to make a statement. She remarked, through an interpreter: "Those who have done wrong will get me out of this. Otherwise I won't say who they are. I will put up with all."

An eye-witness of the shooting states that 50 per cent. of the assassins fired four shots at a policeman, until the latter fell.

Another woman has been arrested.

The "Spectator" says that both Liberals and Conservatives are disappointed with the result of the election. Each side holds an important card.

The paper adds that it is desirable a settlement should be arrived at with respect to the Parliament Bill by an agreement by means of private talks, and not by formal conference.
